

Where the money was, and what the candles looked like

Every decent intraday swing in 388 NSE stocks over 68 sessions, with the ideal entry and exit marked, and the candle that formed before, at and after each turning point.

The lessons' reversal candles really do sit at the turning points. At the ideal long entry the low bar is a hammer shape $1.91\times$ more often than anywhere else, and the bar just before it is a long red body $2.49\times$ more often. At the ideal short entry the high bar is an inverted hammer $2.44\times$ more often and the bar before is a long green body $3.2\times$ more often. Tops and bottoms look the way the videos say they look: a climax candle, then a wick that rejects the extreme, then a long candle the other way.

But the candles are common and the turning points are rare. A hammer shape appears on about 6.3% of all bars; a decent bottom happens about 1.9% of bars. So even with a $1.7\times$ lift, only a few percent of hammers are the bottom (the "precision" column). That is why Part 1 found no forward edge in the shapes alone, and why the money in these swings is only reachable with something the candle does not give you: the level, the time of day, and the size of the move that preceded it.

Practical, not perfect. Entering at the open of the bar after the confirmation bar (the candle-over-candle rule every lesson uses) still keeps a median 0.71% after costs on these swings, 52.6% of the ideal move. The swings are worth chasing; the problem is knowing which hammer is the real one.

2. What sat at the turning points

At the ideal entry bar

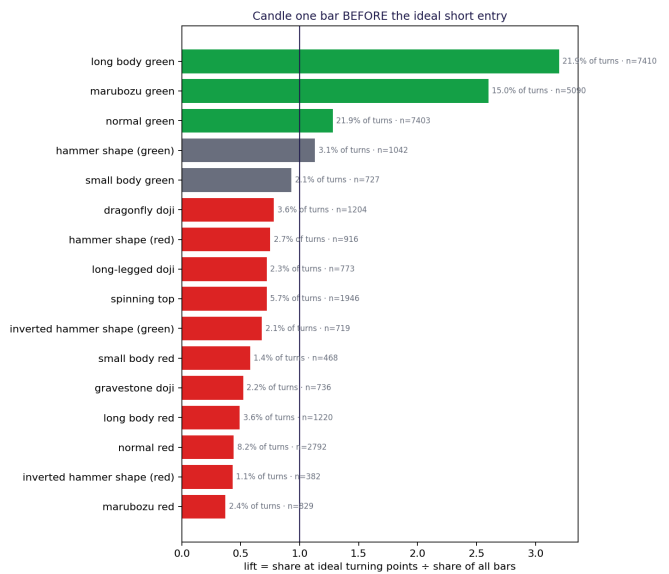

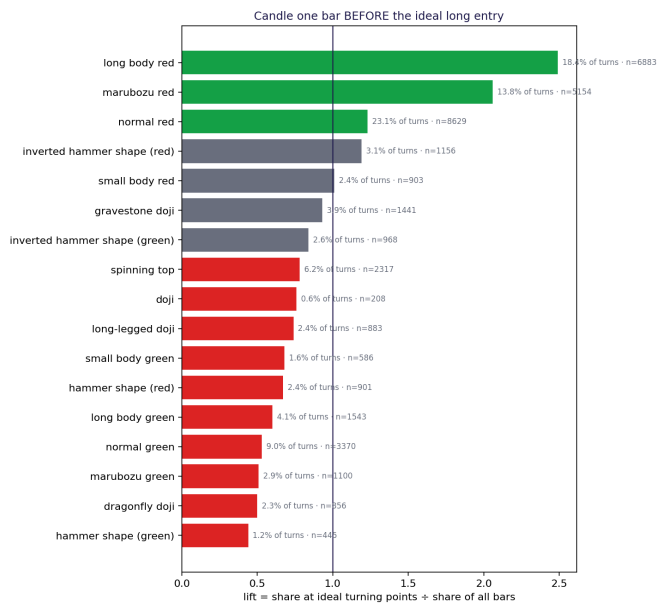

Lift = how much more often the candle appears at an ideal turning point than on a random bar. Precision = share of all bars with that candle that were an ideal turning point. Bars with fewer than 200 occurrences are omitted.

The bar before a bottom is a long red body or a red marubozu at two to three times its normal frequency; the bar before a top is a long green body at three times. The turning point comes after the climax, not after a quiet drift.

Exits are the mirror image. The top of a long is most often a long green body (the climax bar itself) or an inverted-hammer or gravestone rejection; the bottom of a short is a long red body or a hammer. This is the "get out on the first candle-under-candle after a topping tail" rule from lesson 1, seen from the other side.

Doji at top	9,418	4,395	13.23%	16.75%	0.79

Three-bar reversals and breakout candles carry the most lift, around 1.8×, but each sits at only one or two percent of the turning points. Engulfing candles appear at a fifth of all turning points and at almost the same rate everywhere else.

5. What to do with this

1. Teach the agents the sequence, not the shape. The sequence at a bottom is: a run down, a climax red bar, a bar whose low is rejected (hammer, dragonfly, or a small body with a long lower wick), then a green bar over the rejection bar's high. Encode it as features: run length, size of the last red bar in ATR, lower-wick share of the rejection bar, and the break of its high. The same in mirror for tops.
2. Add the missing context. Precision is low because the candle does not know where it is. Distance to the prior-day high/low/close and the session extremes, minutes since the open, and the swing already travelled since the last pivot are the inputs that separate the real hammer from the noise one.
3. Exits deserve the same treatment. The top of a winning long is a climax green bar or a wick rejection. Our engines exit on stops, time and targets; a "climax-bar trail" that tightens the stop after a long green body or an inverted hammer would catch what these charts show.
4. Train and test on the sequence. Label every bar with "ideal turning point within the next 1 bar" from this study, train the ML on the features above, and measure precision at a fixed recall. That is the honest way to find out whether the candles can be read better than by eye.

Method: zigzag with a 0.8% reversal threshold on highs and lows; every swing is an ideal trade from one pivot to the next. Practical entry = open of the bar after the first bar that breaks the pivot bar's high (or low). Costs 12 bps. Single-candle names use the lessons' definitions: body $\leq 10\%$ of range = doji; lower wick $\geq 60\%$ with upper $\leq 15\%$ = hammer shape; body $\geq 85\%$ = marubozu; body $\geq 60\%$ and range above the day's median = long body; body $\leq 30\%$ with wicks both sides = spinning top.
